A number of Trudeau's landscapes and still life paintings displayed in her home have been in exhibitions or will eventually be in a show. Others have been claimed by her daughters and granddaughter. She is donating one of her still life paintings to the Cassina Garden Club that will be used for a fundraising event next spring. It's a painting of a bright orange, double hibiscus that pops off the canvas as though live.

Trudeau's works have been honored with awards from juried art exhibitions, including ones sponsored by the Georgia Watercolor Society, Okefenokee Heritage Center, Jekyll Island Art Festival, and the Georgia Coastal National Show. The first time Trudeau entered the Jekyll Island Art Festival, held each March, she won both first and second place for two of her entries.

Whether it's a painting of a smiling freckled faced girl, a sunny day at the beach on St. Simons, or a single flower, Trudeau manages to capture the inner essence of her subjects. But above all, Trudeau's works celebrate the joy she sees in life. ■

Rita Trudeau's art will be on display during the November Glynn Art Association Show. A limited number of her prints are also available for sale at the Glynn Art Association Store at 319 Mallery Street on St. Simons Island. To commission a portrait, contact Trudeau via email: rstrudeau@bellsouth.net
