

wrong to ask. They taught us all the important stuff about protecting ourselves and making the right choices. But they also taught us about the gift that sexuality is. It's a lesson I feel grateful to have received."

Without the near-universal taboos about sex that most people possess, what subjects do the Berman sisters find difficult to discuss?

"Nothing is really off limits for me in terms of having an open mind and being able to carry on a discussion about a topic openly and honestly," says Jennifer. "I don't necessarily always practice what I preach, but I do try to keep an open mind and not judge people or situations."

The same goes for Laura.

"I don't think I have any!" she says of taboos. "If you're not uptight about sex it's hard to be uptight about anything else."

Fantasies are another thing entirely, though.

"Happiness comes and goes and my fantasy would be to be able to hang onto it and make it last sunrise to sunset or turn it into a drink that you could infuse as needed or desired," Jennifer says. "It's relaxing in the sunshine, no stress, no worries, no problems, children laughing and I'm with someone I love."

Once again, Laura is in tune with her sister's sentiments.

"I'm living my fantasy," she says. "I have a wonderful and supportive husband, three amazing little boys, and an exciting career that keeps me interested and inspired. My parents are healthy and happy and I see them often. I get to travel, meet new people, and come home to bury my toes in the sand of the beaches of St. Simons at least once a summer. What more could you ask for?" ■
