Hise Sullivan: "I think I'm most proud of the Streetscape. My daughters think I laid every brick downtown personally when they hear me describe it. This community facelift was one of the single most important public improvement projects downtown, second only to the revitalization of the City Halls using SPLOST funds.

"I'm also very proud of the Waterfront Park. We learned of a grant that could help fund the work there only days before it was due, and worked around the clock to prepare and submit it in time. We were awarded over one million dollars as I recall, and I left before I could ever see the project completed. Now, I love to go down there and see the improvements to the Farmers' Market and the wonderful structure there."

Hise Sullivan's work in Brunswick attracted notice from the National Trust for Historic Preservation, which hired her for its Washington, D.C. office. She traveled the country sharing what she learned in Brunswick. After three years Hise Sullivan and her
