When you were a child, what did you want to be when you grew up? A radio personality.

If you could retire and start a second career, what would you do? I would want to be a global on-site vacation spot inspector.

What inspires you? People helping others without expectation of anything in return.

What is your favorite quote? "We need to embrace the simple truth that we were made to give ourselves to a cause greater than ourselves." – Rob Bell

What do you put off? Retiling my bathroom.

What would your fight song be? "Jerusalem"

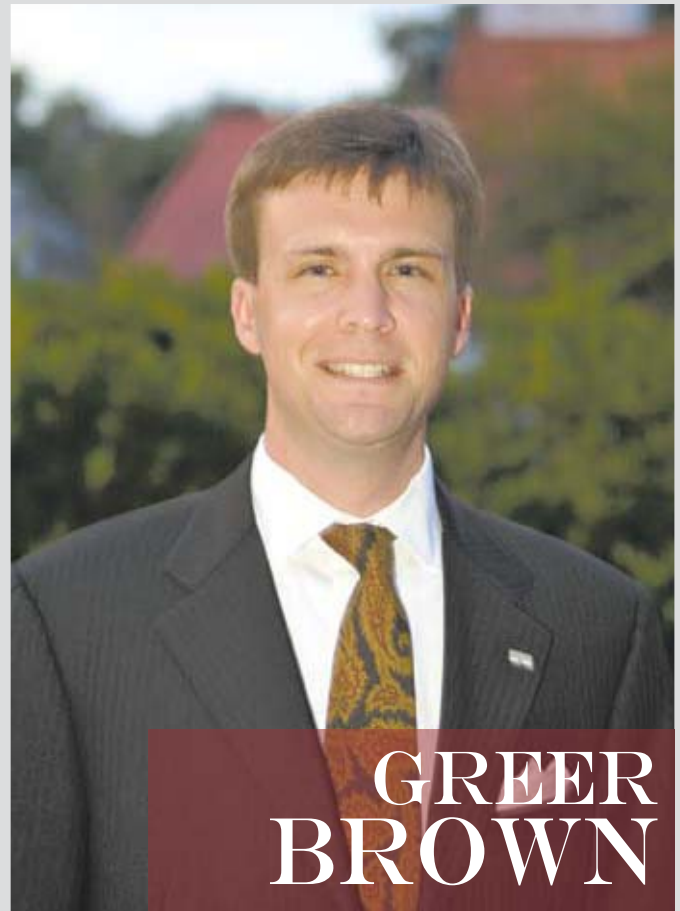

If you could live in any book, which would you choose? "To Kill A Mockingbird" by Harper Lee

What makes you happy? Enabling the dreams of others.

What do you regret? Not trying harder in school.

What personality trait do you least admire? Complaining.

What would you like for the world to know about you? I place tremendous value in my friends. Friends give me a view of reality, and they can also safely and honestly give me feedback on my version of that same reality. Friends provide me with new perspectives, and they do this in total acceptance of who I am. I've got the best friends in the world.

What did you want to be when you grew up? An oil tycoon. "Dallas" was big in the '80s.

If you could retire and start a second career, what would you do? I would love to travel and write for "Conde Nast Traveler."

What is your favorite quote? "If things do not turn out as we wish, we shall wish for them to turn out as they do." – Aristotle

What do you dream about? I dream about one day seeing my grandchildren, and sending them home to their parents after spoiling them miserably.

What would your fight song be? "I Feel Good" by James Brown

If you could live in any book, which would you choose? With 20-month-old twins, I feel like I am living in "Goodnight Moon."

What makes you happy? Spending time with family and friends, especially when it's on a boat.

What do you regret? I used to think that I had regrets, until I realized that it's the culmination of my past experiences that led me to the people and the ideals that I value most today.

What personality trait do you most admire? Agreeableness. I always admire people who go out of their way to be compassionate and cooperative.

What personality trait do you least admire? Neuroticism. Unpleasant emotional outbursts are too often unproductive and damaging.

What would you like for the world to know about you? For better or worse, what you see is what you get.
