

Village Creek Landing

Harrington Community

Once a gathering place where residents of Harrington socialized, Village Creek Landing evolved from a dilapidated neighborhood baitshack and grocery store called “Coozie’s,” after its owner, Coozie Sullivan. Now a venue for private parties, Village Creek Landing and its eastward marsh view once attracted locals and visitors alike who partook of fresh seafood, the low country boil and (for the landlubbers) barbecue sandwiches while rocking on the porch.

Sea Tow Dock

Frederica River

Long years before the real estate boom, people lived off the sea, not the land. In those days, waterfront property was the domain of every man, woman and child. Today those views are premium, as are the places that offer them. The Sea Tow dock, with its westward view, is one of the last venues for working watermen.
